WORLD AFFAIRS is twenty years old. Since 1997, the Journal has thematically gone around the world in eighty issues, like Jules Verne's hero, giving its readers both high and close vantage points to observe and analyse processes and events taking place on all continents and providing rich historical and philosophical perspectives on current affairs. World Affairs takes pride in reflecting the long term views and expert insights of policy makers, scholars and observers in many disciplines and regions. It encompasses geopolitics, economics, geography, sociology, technology and culture in its scope and exercises predictive power to detect the emerging trends and their future consequences. More than three hundred authors have contributed to this global, constantly evolving panorama of civilisations, nations and ideas.
